Bionic Six was an animated television series from the 1980s produced by TMS Entertainment and distributed by MCA TV (a part of, and later renamed, Universal Television).

The main character, 'Bionic-1', was a vigilante who was enhanced with bionic technology, much like The Six Million Dollar Man, and used his abilities to fight the evil forces of Mad Scientist Dr. Scarab. One day, during a vacation in the Himalayas, Bionic-1 (in his civilian identity of Jack Bennett) and his (large and multi-ethnic) family were testing out some new ski equipment when they were suddenly attacked by aliens that had landed in the area (and Scarab's Mecha-Mooks). During the battle, Jack revealed his abilities to his children for the first time.

Soon afterward, there was an avalanche and the Bennetts were all buried alive under radioactive snow. All of them were thrown into paralytic comas, except Jack (whose bionics made him immune to the radioactivity), Unsure how to save them, Bionic-1 brings the family to the lab of Professor Amadeus Sharp, his mentor and Mission Control. Sharp deduces that giving everyone the bionic treatment would cure them of the radioactivity, too.

The treatment was a success: each family member received a unique bionic power in the process which they could activate by saying "Bionics, on!", and they all immediately agree to fight alongside Jack as a team — the Bionic Six.

The members of the team and the Bennett family are:

Jack Bennett (Bionic-1) was a test pilot who enjoyed cooking. His powers included super sight and enhanced hearing, along with optic beams. John Stephenson provided his voice.

Helen Bennett (Mother-1) was Jack's wife, and the mother of the rest of the team. She possessed Psychic Powersnote , and could also create optical illusions using holograms. She was voiced by Carol Bilger.

Eric Bennett (Sport-1) was Jack and Helen's blond, athletic natural son. His power was electromagnetics: He could attract or repel metallic objects with tremendous force, or even rip them apart.

This force was directional and — by varying the shape of his hands, or by using one or both arms — Sport-1 could adjust the strength of attraction/repulsion. He frequently used a baseball bat to return attacks to their source. At local Albert Einstein High School, Eric was in the 11th grade and captain of the baseball team. Moreover, he often worked various baseball expressions into everyday conversation. He was voiced by Hal Rayle.

Meg Bennett (Rock-1), Jack and Helen's natural daughter and youngest child, was an excitable and somewhat ditzy girl who loved music... and who said "So-LAR!" (another word for "awesome") a lot. She also made frequent use of the prefixes "Mega-!" (as befitting her first name) and, less frequently, "Ultra-!" As her codename Rock-1 (as in "rock and roll") implied, she could shoot sonic beams from blaster units mounted on her shoulders. (The blaster units were visible only while she was in "Bionic Mode.") She could also run at incredible speeds (even faster than the rest of the team). At AEHS, Meg was in the ninth grade. Meg was voiced by Bobbi Block.

JD Bennett (IQ) was Jack and Helen's super-intelligent adopted African-American son. He enjoyed boxing. He had Super-Strength and super-intelligence — a Genius Bruiser. (JD was the only member with a codename that didn't include the number 1.) At AEHS, JD was in the 12th grade. What his initials stood for was never clarified. He was voiced by Norman Bernard.

Bunji (Karate-1) was the last Bennett on the team, Jack and Helen's foster son. He was placed under their guardianship after his own father disappeared. Bunji (short for Bunjiro) was a cute, but troublemaking, Asian-American karate enthusiast. He had martial arts skills, made more formidable with his bionics (some sources claim his enhancement was even stronger legs). At AEHS, Bunji was in the 11th grade. He was voiced by Brian Tochi, of Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles (1990) and Space Academy fame.

F.L.U.F.F.I., a gorilla-like robot made by Professor Sharp, who lived with the Bennetts. He looked and acted a little dumb, but was quite helpful to the Bionic Six...whether he was helping the Bennett kids with their homework, or assisting the adults with a perilous scientific experiment. Unfortunately, FLUFFI had one serious weakness: a craving for aluminum. If he wasn't fed regularly, he'd think nothing of eating the Bennetts' pots and pans. As with JD, what FLUFFI's initials stood for was only speculated on, never revealed throughout the series, and the official merchandise included a comment that Professor Sharp couldn't remember what the acronym meant.

Bionic Allies:

Professor Amadeus Sharp was the genius scientist who infused the Bionic Six with bionics. All of his research was supported by the government. He lived alone in his private museum; which beneath held his secret laboratory, the hidden base of the Bionic Six. Amadeus is also Dr. Scarab's younger brother. He was voiced by Alan Oppenheimer.

Like any great superheroes, the Bionic Six had an archenemy in the form of Dr. Scarab (real name: Dr. Wilmer Sharp, Amadeus Sharp's older brother), a large, evil and occasionally comical man who yearned for the secret to eternal life. He was voiced by Jim MacGeorge. During the Himalayas incident, Scarab assembled a rag-tag team of ex-convicts and psychiatric patients and gave them bio-mechanical powers, turning them into his Quirky Miniboss Squad, described below:

Glove - Named for his blaster glove. He always schemed to replace Dr. Scarab. He was voiced by Frank Welker.

Madame-O - A blue-skinned Femme Fatale who wore a full face mask and used a "harp" weapon to fire sonic blasts. Often the rival to Meg aka Rock-1, and preferred classical music to her rock. Not surprising, since she was a senior citizen before Dr. Scarab transformed her. In one episode, Madame O is seen without her mask, and though appearing elderly, is still quite a looker. She was voiced by Jennifer Darling.

Mechanic - A dimwitted, brutish Psychopathic Manchild who used various mechanical tools as weapons. He was voiced by Frank Welker.

Chopper - A chain-wielding thug who always sounded as though he were revving up a motorcycle. He was voiced by Frank Welker.

Klunk - An inarticulate monstrosity that appeared to be made of living glue. He was voiced by John Stephenson.

In addition, Scarab and his minions were capable of holographically disguising themselves. Whenever Scarab and his team felt ready to remove their disguises, they slammed their fists to their chest insignias, exclaiming "Hail Scarab!" (Scarab, however, exclaimed, "Hail me!"). Doing so also served another purpose—the activation of a temporary strength enhancement.

In addition to his henchmen, Scarab also used Cyphrons in his fight against the Bionic Six.
