SYNOPSIS: Now high school seniors, Tamako and the Baton Club decide to participate in a marching competition, while Mochiz? mulls over his romantic interest in Tamako in addition to preparing to attend college in Tokyo for film-making. Under pressure from Midori, at the riverbank, he tells Tamako of his future plans and confesses his love to her. Tamako is taken aback and runs away; over the next few days, she remains distracted by the event as she struggles over her own feelings and coming up with an answer for Mochiz?. When her grandfather is hospitalized, Tamako and Mochiz? stay behind, during which he tells her to forget his confession. After the Baton Club's performance, Midori lies to Tamako that Mochiz? is transferring schools to Tokyo (in reality, he was simply visiting for entrance exams), which prompts her to follow him to the train station. After stopping him from boarding his train, Tamako confesses to him.
