SYNOPSIS: The story begins with a young singer named Nora, from Chicago, who is also the one performing in front of the most influential business mogul on the island, Manuel Alvarez. Nora shows impressive talent, and Manuel immediately notices it. He offers her an exclusive contract to sing for his club, with the condition of receiving triple the money she receives from her main job.

Nora is excited about the job offer. When she's already at Manuel's club, the bartender, Akheem, accidentally spills some wine while serving it to her. He immediately apologizes, and Nora doesn't make it a big deal. Instead, she says to him that it's okay and it's not his fault.

But things take a darker turn when Manuel doesn't take it lightly and grabs a knife, plunging it into Akheem's throat and causing his death. Nora is terrified when she witnesses the dark side of her new boss. However, she doesn't have any choice except to agree to what Manuel wants and become his private singer on his island.

The story shifts to a construction site in Los Angeles, where Mark Ethridge, a strict and quiet LAPD officer, is catching some drug dealers along with his talkative partner Phil. Meanwhile, Mark receives a call that upsets him, and quickly goes to the island. This introduces the fact that Mark is Akheem's elder brother.

The two grew up on the island after their parents moved there until some tragedy caused Mark to move to LA almost seven years ago. When Mark and his wife, Akilah, lost their stillborn daughter, it caused them trauma that led to their separation, and Mark left the island.

This time, the tragedy that happened to them brings Mark back to the place he used to call home. Now he is even more determined to learn more about his brother's cause of death. Mark goes through his brother's things at their parental home after his brother's wake.

Their mother, Yvonne, tells him things on the island have significantly changed since he left. Mark is determined to make things right. Yet, even though Yvonne lost one of her sons, she's afraid that Mark will also get involved in trouble. Mark goes to his old friend, who is also the police chief on the island, named Nate Wayland.

He goes there to get updates and leads about his brother's death, yet still fails to find something important that will help the case. Mark also meets with his childhood friend named Teseam. He retrieves Teseam's hidden bullets and weapons. The last visit he pays is to his ex-wife, Akilah. She has taught island kids at the dojo for three years.

Akilah informs Mark that drug problems have slowly overrun the island due to gangs from nearby islands. Later, Manuel has essentially taken control of the island. He is in charge of finance, business, law, and several other sectors as well. Akilah also lets Mark know that Akheem joined Manuel's club as a bartender months ago. This information leads Mark to suspect Manuel's involvement in his brother's death.

Because of that, Mark goes to Manuel, and their conversation becomes heated. When talking about Akheem, Manuel tells Mark that Akheem mistakenly went into their club, thinking it was another local club, which led to him crossing paths with the northern gangs. Mark eventually arrives at the club to check on the gang members he believes were involved in his brother's death, and a fight ensues. However, Mark quickly knocks them out.

Manuel contacts a squad to go to the club and finish off Mark. But he still manages to escape. The squad goes to Mark's house to kill Yvonne. When they are about to shoot at the home, they realize Yvonne has already left because Mark sent her to Akila's place to ensure her safety, no matter what happens. Nate arrives and meets Mark. He insists on helping Nate with the case to benefit the people on the island. Nate advises Mark to talk to Nora, who might know about his brother's death.
